NEW YEAR'S RESOLUTIONS

"My," Bertie Bird exclaimed to Brother Billie one frosty January morning, "did you hear all of those bells last night?"

"Did I?" Billie muttered crossly. "I didn't get a wink of sleep. What a fine way to start the New Year!"

"So that's what it was all about!" Bertie twittered excitedly. "Well, Happy New Year, Billie!" Suddenly his little eyes twinkled. "I guess it's time to make our New Year's resolutions again!"

"We never keep them," Billie reminded him darkly. "Why bother?"

"Of course we'll keep them," Bertie said staunchly. Then he eyed his brother carefully. "Er—are you going to try not to be so terribly cross again this year?" he asked hesitantly.

Billie started to retort, then he grinned. "Okay," he agreed, "if you promise to keep out of trouble!"

Bertie flitted merrily to-and-fro on the tree branch that held their nest in Apple Tree Lane. "I do! I do!" he cried recklessly. "I won't go on any adventure that seems the least bit dangerous, I promise!"

Just then, they heard a muffled "cheep" from the ground. Bertie hopped to the edge of the branch and peered down. "Why, it's a baby chick!" he exclaimed. "Look, the poor little thing is caught in those vines at the bottom of the tree. Come on, Billie!"

Billie drew back. "Excuse me," he said politely, "but aren't you forgetting your New Year's resolution?"

"Of course not!" said Bertie indignantly. "What can be dangerous about helping a poor little chick in need?" He spread his wings and landed on the ground with a little p-l-o-p. "Don't worry," he told the chick reassuringly, "we'll peck at those old vines and have you free in seconds."

"You're certainly free with my services," Billie said dryly, landing beside his brother. "I do hope you're noticing how pleasant I'm being about it!"

"You're doing real well," Bertie praised him. "And while we're about it, you might notice that I've kept my part of the bargain, too!"

Billie was about to agree when suddenly he stopped pecking at the vines and froze to the ground. "What was that?" he hissed.

"What was what?" Bertie Bird asked absently, and then returning to his task, he added: "There you are, chick. Now you're as free as a bird!"

"Kut kut kadaw! Kut kut kadaw!" The big yellow hen appeared from behind a bush and made her way angrily towards the two blue-birds. "Kadaw! Kadaw! Kadaw!"

Instantly, Billie left the ground, fluttering his wings in great excitement. "Hurry, Bertie!" he screamed. "That mother hen really means business!"

"I can't!" Bertie wailed. "Now my foot is caught!"

The furious hen came closer and closer, squawking and cackling and baring her claws as she approached Bertie Bird.

"Oh, dear," Bertie moaned, "this is the end!"

Fortunately, just then, the baby chick clawed at the vine which had trapped Bertie, and the little bird was suddenly free!

"Oh, thank you!" gasped Bertie, sailing high up into the air. The only trouble was that he had to listen to Billie scold him crossly all the way home. And Billie did not remember even once that he had broken his resolution, too!
